Course overview

The number of teachers in England have remained fairly consistent over the past 10 years, but the same cannot be said for learning support practitioners; the number of full-time positions has tripled in the same time period – from just under 80,000 to over 243,000. Learning support practitioners help teachers with their workloads, but that is just the beginning of how vital the role has become.

This course will equip learners with a detailed understanding of supporting teaching and learning in schools, including understanding how to safeguard children and young people's well-being, providing support for learning and learning activities, and developing professional relationships with children, young people and adults.

Learners will also look at schools as organisations, promoting children and young people's positive behaviour and promoting equality, diversity and inclusion when working with children and young people.

Who is suitable?

This qualification is aimed at anyone who wishes to develop an in-depth understanding of the skills and knowledge needed to support teaching and learning in schools. This qualification is suitable for learners aged 16 or above.

Learners must either be working in an appropriate school environment for a minimum of 12 hours per week, (this can include both voluntary and unpaid work), or be able to organise an appropriate placement within a school environment, in order to study the course.

Learning method

Studying via distance learning means you can choose when and where you study. We ensure you get all the support you need throughout your course in the form of a Personal Tutor and a Learner Support Advisor.
